CHATHAM COLLEGE
PITTSBURGH, PA.

Somewhere
between daybreak and dusk
a design of directions unfolds —

a morning-lit woodland walk,
an iron gate,
entangled within the mesh of vine
tendrils
which twine about the wrought workmanship . . .

the looping sheen
among the chandeliers . . .

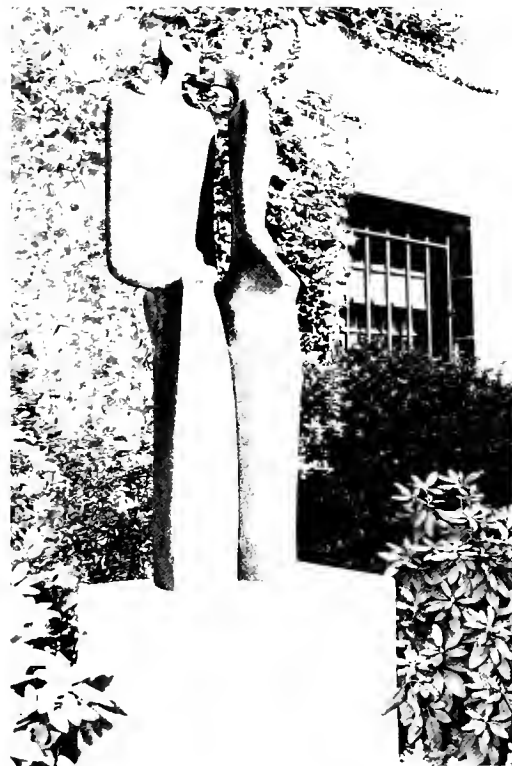

a sculptured thought . . .

the ivy
clings and creeps
across the brick
of the Georgian buildings . . .

at close inspection,
a branch —
where hidden among the network
of its offshoots and leafage,
it cradles a cocoon . . .

always,
the chapel rests
high atop the hill . . .

a chandelier hangs overhead, challenged by
the sunlit stained glass window;
both illuminating the ornate staircase as Past's portraits look on . . .

a cherub faced fountain serves as foreground for the expansive estate —
tell-tale of the "once-upon-a-times"
of long ago . . .

a granite-cut lion
and his coarse-maned partner, who caretakers of tradition, silently oversee
as one passes up
the weather-worn steps . . .

transcending,
the Pittsburgh skyline reaches out —
peering forward,
through a wooded grove . . .

Edward D. Eddy
President of Chatham College
from 1960 — 1977

Many of the achievements of the Eddy administration will remain apparent for years to come, while others will be lost in the shuffle of new decisions and new demands. What should not be lost, however, is the example of strength, energy, devotion and integrity that President and Mrs. Eddy have provided in such great abundance. It is the special privilege of the 1977 Cornerstone to express the deepest appreciation to the Eddys for their years of remarkable service and achievement.

No Narrow Schoolmaster

IN a time of drastically changing attitudes on the part of women about their role in life and the schooling needed to prepare for it, Dr. Edward D. Eddy, Jr. as president of Chatham College was a pathfinder for changes in women's higher education.

Now he departs from Pittsburgh after 17 years to become provost of Penn State University. He will leave behind a solid record not only at Chatham but in such activities as the Pittsburgh Symphony Society board, the board of trustees at WQED and as a sparkplug for the Pittsburgh Council on Higher Education, which involves all the institutions of higher learning here.

"Ted" Eddy kept Chatham ahead of the pack by making it responsive to what women, and particularly young women, wanted to prepare themselves in a world of much wider choices than once seemed possible. Chatham has managed to create career-oriented courses without watering down its traditional liberal arts emphasis.

In short, Dr. Eddy has been no narrow schoolmaster, but an innovative, imaginative educator. We wish him well at Penn State.

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

The years from 1960 to 1977 were extraordinary and challenging times in American higher education. Happily for Chatham College they were years during which President Edward D. Eddy provided leadership to match the times.

WARRENTON, Va., April 8--Stories about wild, immoral college students are exaggerated, the president of Chatham College in Pittsburgh said here today.

Dr. Edward D. Eddy Jr. said the stories are written by "peeping tom" reporters who always manage to find what they're looking for.

. . . a circular window frames its perspective —
reeling in the late day sun . . .

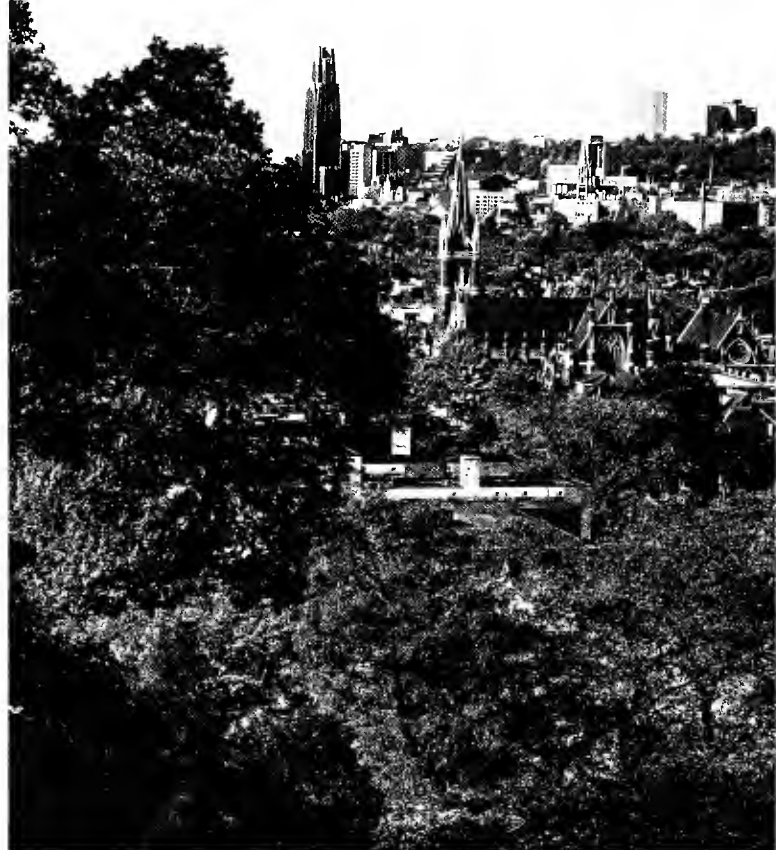

the gate post stands
hidden beneath the ivy vines
which crawl across the indentations
of the stone masonry,

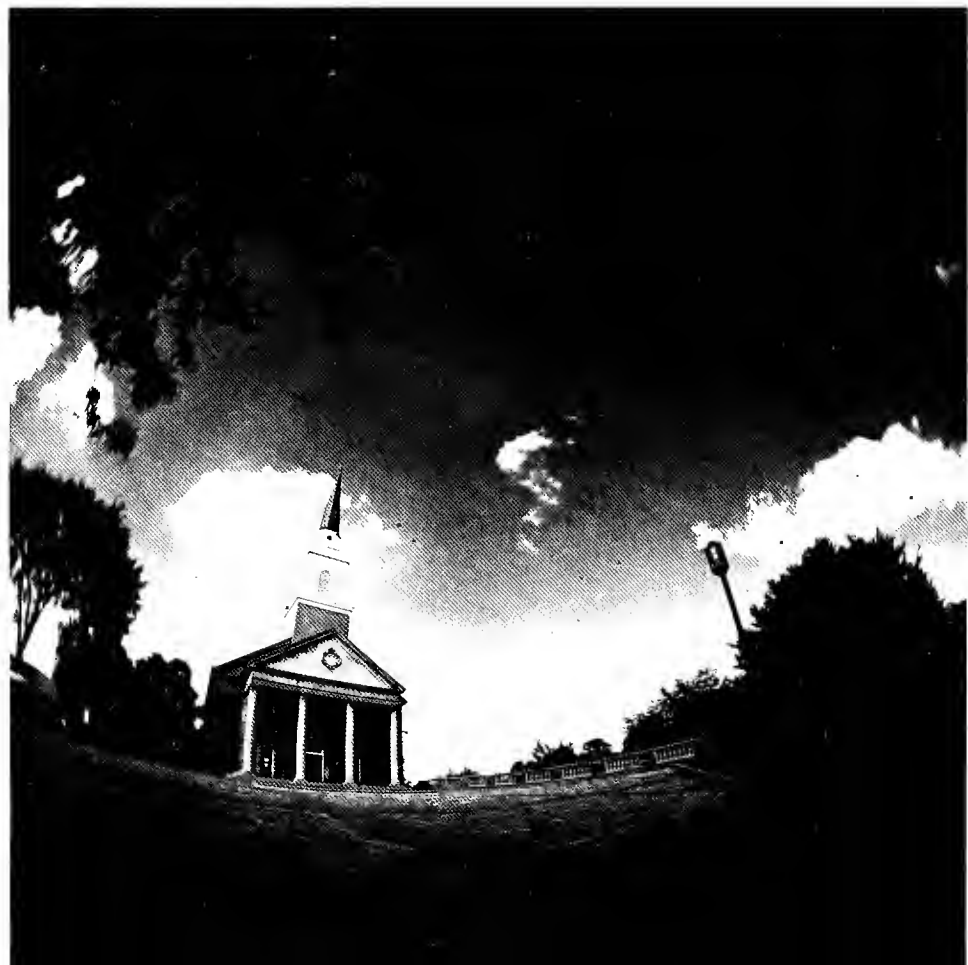

the chapel is heard —
its bells seem to mute all else
as they ring —
calling the sun
to set in its windows . . .

the branches
send shadows
to fall across the road, distorting over the pavement

...
silhouetted
by the wooded hill,
the sky dims into
a watercolor-wash,
painted in pastels ...

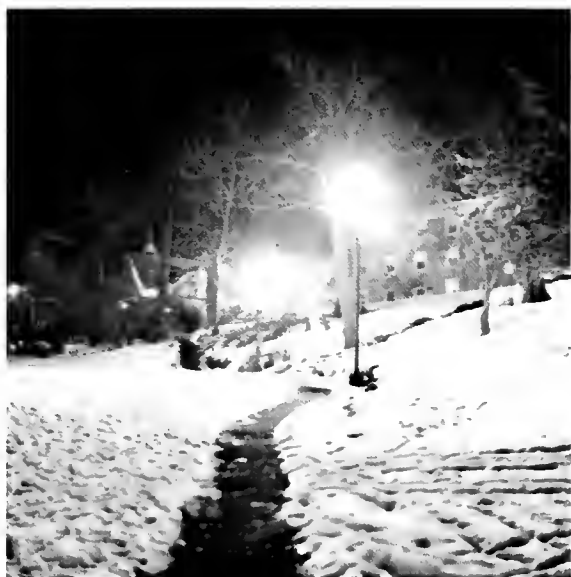

through the solarium windows,
the dusk light sends shadows
to dance across
the faces of the fountain . . .

illuminating,
the lanterns light-line Woodland road —
drawing beams
in diverse directions,
like lamp-lit arrows,
they continue . . .

Note

When you think about it that's really what music is all about.

Notes.

They're conceived. Written down.
Arranged and rearranged.

They're stacked up. And stretched out. Molded into Bluegrass. And woven into Classics.

Notes are played. Sometimes loudly. And also softly. They're plucked. Beaten. Bowed. And blown. On ancient flutes. And on modern day synthesizers.

Notes are also conducted. And recorded. And then they're reproduced.

After all that, we think it's unthinkable that anyone should ever miss a note.

That's why we make it our business to sell stereo equipment that will reproduce each and every note—just the way it was played.

And one final note. You won't find any better equipment. Any better price. Or any better service. Anywhere.

CAMERA SHY CORNERSTONE STAFF

Patrice Yesh — seniors
Joanne Pompeo — business manager

My goal for this yearbook was simple — to make the 1977 Cornerstone as interesting and unique as I possibly could. The extent to which I accomplished my goal will be determined by you, the reader. I sincerely hope that each of you have found something in the book which you are able to relate to, for a yearbook does not serve it's purpose if it only represents a select few.

Special thanks to Jane Pugh & Lynn Fisher for their help in our midnight panic sessions, & to Helen Booch for her calm encouragement. Very special thanks to Al Hartman, for his mad creative photographer genius in both the senior & color pictures, & to his cohort George Stewart, for receiving all my late night phone calls. Additional thanks to Ed Sumrock for providing the candid pictures.

To my staff, & all others that helped in any way a most sincere thank-you.

Nina
